

Matt's Update

Sorry for the long delay again, time slips by so fast. As of today, 9/24/08, Matt is back at Stanford. Irene and Matt had to go to Stanford last night. Matt's blood count was down again and he has an infection. They are treating his infection and once they get it under control, Matt will get another blood transfusion. Matt and Irene will probably be at Stanford through the weekend.

It's been a little rough lately and Matt's spirits have been down a bit. Matt is trying to go to school a few days a week and his home school teacher, Mr. Chanelop, comes by a few times a week. Matt really likes Mr. Chanelop. Thanks Mr. Chanelop for all that you do, we really appreciate it.

The last few months, since the last update, have been a blur for me. I apologize for not remembering everything that has gone on. Matt did have his second MRI since surgery and it was clear (Thank God).

We postponed Matt's last chemo treatment, so he could go to his school dance. The dance was on Friday 9/12 and Matt had a great time. Matt had his third round of chemo on 9/15 and was at Stanford for three days.

Matt is still not eating much regular food, he's still having a hard time with this. He's still feeding through the tube (18) hours a day.

Matt really enjoys reading his guest book, so thanks to everyone who sends him a note. Thanks for checking in and as always, thanks for all the love and support.
